

Harm Reduction and Community-Led Monitoring

Abstract | Advocacy & Policy

Community-led monitoring strengthens harm-reduction programming by placing data and accountability in the hands of affected communities. This abstract outlines approaches used among networks of people who use drugs in Kenya, including community scorecards, service-quality feedback and documentation of access barriers. It discusses how community-generated evidence complements routine data, surfaces gaps in services, and drives responsive, rights-based advocacy.